Of Boston, Mass., Chartered in 1843,
Capital and accumulation, $650,000.

THIS Company is one of the oldest, and among the most prudently and successfully conducted in the country. The primary object in conducting its business has been to provide perfect security under all conceivable circumstances, for the payment of its losses under its policies, and to return to the insured the surplus at stated periods, and strict economy is observed.

Every insured person is a member of the company and shares in the profits of the business, and is subject to no liability or assessments beyond his premium.

The directors are required to be peculiarly interested in the company, and they give their personal attention to the business, and to the faithful performance of their duties.

Insurance may be effected for the benefit of the wife, which is secured to her by law beyond the reach of a husband's creditors; and creditors may insure the lives of debtors.

Highly Important to Farmers.
THE ONLY EXCLUSIVE FARMERS' INSURANCE COMPANY IN THE WEST.

THE MADISON MUTUAL,
LOCATED AT MADISON, WISCONSIN.

THIS Company continues to take risks upon Farm Property, consisting of buildings of all kinds, (belonging to farmers,) household furniture, grain in barns, live stock, &c., from one to five years, at lower rates than most other responsible companies. All losses promptly paid at the office as soon as proof is made thereon.

We believe it to be for the interest of the farmer to insure by themselves, their property being less hazardous than any other, consequently you will have no loss of your own of the same class, and all will be on an equal footing.

Experience has shown that two-thirds, if not three-fourths of all the fires that occur are upon stores, taverns, shops and such like property. In this company all such property is rejected positively, by LETTING THEM ALONE.

Farmers, look to your own interest, and insure in a Farmers' Company.

We have been doing business a little over three years, and we have not been obliged to assess our premium notes, and for the last fourteen months we have not had a single fire loss upon property insured in this company. In the manufacture of this insurance, we believe to be without a parallel in the history of insurance.

THE ARTIST'S TRIUMPH.
A TALE OF LONDON.
BY HORATIO ALGER, JR.

CHAPTER I.

"Dear Arthur," said the low, tender voice of a female, as she brushed back the heavy chestnut locks from his pale brow, "you must not, indeed you must not labor so incessantly. You will injure your health—perhaps ruin it entirely, and then what will be left for me?"

"Mary," said the young painter caressingly, "you are alarming yourself to no purpose. I am not weary. Besides, what were a little weariness in comparison with the great purpose I have in view? You know the exhibition will open in a fortnight, and my picture is still unfinished. Oh," continued he with enthusiasm, while a faint flush overspread his pale cheek, "if it could be my fortune to gain the great prize of five hundred pounds which has been offered for the best painting on exhibition, I believe I could die content."

"Arthur!" said his wife reproachfully. "But better still," said the young painter caressingly, "to live and enjoy it with you, my sweet wife. With such a start what might I not hope for? Fame—fortune—friends, all would be mine. But it is growing late, and I have still much to do before I retire. But do not wait for me, dear Mary; I shall work the faster if I know that you are sleeping."

Arthur Elliot was the son of a clergyman in one of the midland counties of England. At the age of seventeen he had entered the office of his uncle, an attorney in London, a hard, worldly man, wholly engrossed in business. Young Arthur, who was a boy of sensitive and highly imaginative temperament, found little sympathy with his peculiar tastes in the dry musty folios over which he was expected to pore day after day, or in the deeds and legal instruments which he was called upon to engross. He devoted his leisure time to obtaining some knowledge of painting, from a teacher of that art. He made so great proficiency in this department, as to surprise his teacher, who exclaimed with enthusiasm that he was born to be an artist.

"And why should I not be?" thought Arthur to himself. "With law I am completely disgusted; I shall never make a figure at it. Why then should I not abandon what I so utterly detest, and pursue that which offers so much stronger attractions?"

Full of this resolution, he went to his uncle and requested his permission to adopt it. But the scheme appeared absurd and chimerical to the man of business, and he utterly forbade Arthur's cherishing any such plans in future. This to one of his nephew's high spirit was more than he could bear. His place in his uncle's office was vacant the next day, and remained so. Arthur had collected his little articles of personal property, and fled to the house of his instructor, where, undetected he pursued his studies with the utmost assiduity. His master had a daughter, a beautiful girl, whose disposition and manners were as amiable as his features were faultless. What wonder that Arthur fell in love, and that the two, with their father's consent, exchanged vows of fidelity, though both were too young yet to think of marriage?

This, however, was hastened by an event which plunged them both in affliction. Mary's father died. She was left alone in the world, with no one but Arthur to depend upon. Arthur was just on the verge of twenty—Mary but sixteen. Under the circumstances, however, it was thought best they should marry. Mary's fortune was but small. Her father left behind him nothing but the materials of his art.

At first Arthur resolved to follow in the steps of his father-in-law, but he soon found this to be an insupportable drudgery, and became convinced that this was no way to become an artist.

He accordingly commenced painting pictures for sale, but, as is too often the case, found that genius unknown is unappreciated. His income was scanty—hardly sufficient to supply himself and Mary with the bare necessities of life.

It was at this stage that it was announced that at the annual exhibition of paintings the prize already alluded to would be awarded to the production, pronounced by a committee appointed for that purpose, to be the most deserving.

This offer fired Arthur's ambition. Why should not he, filled as he was with the inspiration of genius, why should not he gain it? It was not impossible. He could at least try.

He selected as his subject "The Transfiguration of the Saviour." Without entering into details of the painting, which could only be done properly by an artist, it is sufficient to say the conception was a grand one, and the execution of a high character.

But in the mean time, how were they to live? The painting on which Arthur was now engaged was a work of time, and it was a considerable period before he could hope to derive any pecuniary profit from it.

They were now renting a small attic chamber in an obscure street in London; Mary had assisted her husband as far as she was able, by obtaining work from the slop-shops, which amounted to a mere pittance, but they had learned to live frugally under that sternest of teachers—necessity.

CHAPTER II.

It was early on the morning of the day after that which our story commences. Arthur, worn out by his midnight vigils, had not yet risen. Mary was astir; she had already prepared and eaten a frugal meal, and the small table—the only one in the apartment—was covered with a white cloth, on which was spread, as tempting an array as the nature of the food would admit, the breakfast intended for the husband.

Suddenly there was a violent knock at the door. Mary glanced towards her husband, who still lay buried in deep sleep, apprehensive that he might be awakened, and then went towards the door and opened it.

A coarse-faceted man entered. "Good morning, Mrs. Elliot," was his salutation. "You see I have come for my week's rent. I am not likely to forget that."

"The rent!" said Mary, apprehensively. "I am sorry, Mr. Mudge, but I haven't quite got it ready. I didn't succeed in finishing the work I had on hand so soon as I anticipated, and I must ask your indulgence for a day or two."

"Oh yes, the old story," said the man with a sneer; "and if I should come again in a day or two, you wouldn't have finished the work you have on hand, and would ask for a day or two more. Oh yes, I am used to such games."

"But, Mr. Mudge, have I failed you before, and should I be likely to begin now? If you will come Tuesday you shall have the rent, if I have to pawn some of my furniture to raise the money."

Mr. Mudge was half persuaded, but still sullen. "There's your husband; why doesn't he work? He is able to. You wouldn't find any difficulty in raising the rent if he would do something."

"Arthur works already beyond his strength," was the wife's slightly indignant rejoinder, for she could not bear to have any imputation upon him, and some day we shall see what it will lead to.

Just then her husband stirred in his sleep, and Mary hastily repeating, "Call again Tuesday and you shall have it," closed the door and went to his bedside.

"They are a proud set," said Mudge to himself, as he descended the rickety stair case which nearly caused him to stumble. "They are a proud set, and they say pride and poverty always go together. But if the rent isn't ready Tuesday, their pride will be pretty likely to meet with a fall, or my name isn't Mudge."

Perceiving that her husband still slept, the artist's wife took up her work, and began to ply her needle busily. The work she had received from the slop-shop consisted of shirts for which she received eighteen pence a piece. She had taken a bundle of six, which when completed, would amount to a little over a dollar. By great diligence she could make three of these in two days, which would give them an income of rather more than a dollar and a half per week. Of this sum one half was obliged to go for the rent of the miserable room in which they lodged.

By and by Arthur aroused himself from the deep sleep in which he had been plunged, and looked around him.

"It is late," said he; "the sun is already high, and I must go to work."

He dressed himself hastily, and partook of the food which his wife had prepared for him.

The next day passed, and Monday afternoon brought to Mrs. Elliot the sad conviction that she had miscalculated as to the rapidity with which she could perform her work, and that she would not after all be prepared to meet Mr. Mudge with the rent on the day following. Knowing his unfeeling nature, she could not doubt that he would insist on their instantly vacating the apartment. This was to be avoided at all hazards. She knew her husband's high spirit, and she feared for the consequences if Mr. Mudge should be insolent.

Full of this thought she took a light gold chain which in earlier days her husband had presented to her, and proceeded with reluctant step to the pawnbroker's. It was drawing towards evening, and she hurried through the streets, scarcely daring to look to the right hand or to the left, lest she should meet with some interruption.

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.—The Morris Yeoman speaks as follows of the late effort of senator Douglas at Morris:

"Taking it as a whole, the effort was perfectly satisfactory, as a clear exhibition of the Giant's calibre, his aims, motives, and his entire animus. But we must give him credit for one successful hit. It was good—it made us smile very loud—and he deserves to have it recorded. He told us something of course we never heard of before, that the whig party was dead, and that he always spoke with the proudest respect of the dead! This was rich—this was certainly rich, coming as it did from the man who, during the last six months, has cut the throat, ripped the abdomen, flayed the body, and scalped the head of the democratic party, and laid it out a hopeless, resurrectionless corpse. It was rich, we say, to hear the man talk of dead whiggery, who is himself the walking obituary upon the democratic party."

The honorable gentleman was really fiery in his remarks upon those wonderful people, the "Know Nothings." He read from a bit of paper their diabolical oaths and cabalistic catches, and told about their orgies, their arms, their unholy vigils—how every one of them was pledged to kill his grandfather, if he was a foreigner, and to eat him afterward, until the hair of his auditors was ready to rise with terror, and we really trembled for one of the gentlemen's backers on the platform, who had many indications about them of membership with those ghastly conspirators."

TRUE.—The N. O. Bulletin, remarking upon the comparatively small proportion which the foreign born population, introduced in this country since 1790, together with their descendants now bear to the entire population, accounts for it thus:

"The reason why the foreign born do not sum a greater figure in our census statistics, is truly a sad one. It has been estimated that fifty per cent. of the emigrants die within twelve months after embarking. This estimate is probably too large; but when we recollect that they constitute nearly nine-tenths of those who die from ship fever, epidemics of all kinds, explosions and accidents, to say nothing of the fatality of acclimation, it cannot be denied that it has a melancholy basis of fact to rest upon. We wish it were otherwise, but of what avail are human wishes."

SOMETHING RICH.—A story has been going the rounds that Douglas recently wrote a letter, in which he used the following language concerning Mr. Yates, a candidate for congress in Illinois:

"Beat the damned little pup, cost what it will, and it will learn him to leave my business alone."

The Cleveland Plain Dealer of Monday, says: "Douglas never wrote such a line. Senator Douglas does not swear. He is a professor of religion, prays in his family, and is a model man morally." All his personal acquaintances bear testimony to this.

The Plaindealer also states that Douglas is not a slaveholder. If he is not, he must recently have sold three hundred negroes. A few weeks since the Washington Union published a long account of a big dinner given to Douglas' negroes, at which there was fun alive.—Cincinnati Commercial.

THE NEW DOLLAR COIN.—We learn that the secretary of the treasury has ordered the new gold dollar coin, described at length by us some time since, to be substituted for the American gold dollar coin now in circulation. As we remarked, when previously writing on the subject the new coin has as large a surface as the silver five cent piece. Orders have been sent to have them struck off in all the United States mints, in which coining is done. No more of the current gold dollar will be struck off.—Washington Star.

ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS AT SYRACUSE.—The corner stone of the New York asylum for idiots was laid with appropriate ceremonies at Syracuse, on Friday, the 8th inst., at 11 o'clock in the forenoon. This will be the first building erected in the United States for the education of idiots.

MONROE SENTINEL.—Messrs. N. L. Stout and G. W. Tenney have leased this paper for a year, and will during that time edit and publish it.—The Sentinel, under the charge of Mr. Wallworth, left the Pierce and Douglas democracy, and the new publishers take it where he left it, openly advocating the republican cause, and supporting republican candidates. It deserves well from the people of Green county, and we hope it will be handsomely sustained.

WHO SHALL QUIT?—The Richmond Whig, in evident alarm at the popular indignation which itself, with southern whig senators and congressmen, aided a servile democracy in arousing at the north, exclaims—"We are tired of this everlasting commotion about negroes; the southern people are tired of it, and they want peace and quiet, if it can be obtained without the sacrifice of their inalienable rights." To this appeal the Albany Journal replies: "It is unfortunate that such sentiments were not sooner expressed and acted upon by the leading journalists and congressmen of the south. They could have had 'peace and quiet' long ago if they had desired it. Indeed, they had them pretty effectually, until they chose to violate the compromises by which they were secured. Now, what they refused to be satisfied with when it was attained, they cannot secure for the asking. It is too late. The 'commotion' evoked by the south, when it followed the Douglas lead, cannot be laid until the compact violated shall be avenged, by securing Kansas and Nebraska to freedom, and the recognition of the principle that all territories and all new states shall be free. The whig, therefore, is likely to become very tired before it secures what it so earnestly covets."

No one can fail to see, and every candid man must admit, that whatever evil (if evil there be) the agitation now convulsing the free states threatens the country, southern slaveholders and northern politicians are solely responsible for it. The north, not less than the south, earnestly desired peace and quiet. After a long struggle in congress, the compromises of 1850 had been passed, and the public mind, embittered by the struggle, continued the contest waged in that capital. At length, tired of the warfare, the public sentiment, "smothered, not convinced," as the Grant County Herald well remarked in an article we copied yesterday, was prepared to reluctantly acquiesce in what it could not change, and purchase peace at the expense of a humiliating submission. Not satisfied with this triumph, new demands were made upon the forbearance of the north, and new immunities were demanded for an institution repugnant to every feeling of humanity and justice. A compromise made thirty years ago, to quiet an agitation then pervading the union, and under which the south had realized all to which it was entitled, and the north had received nothing, was most treacherously repealed, without warning to the people or the slightest authority from them. To accomplish this, southern whig representatives united with their old democratic enemies, and the whole power and patronage of an administration elected and pledged to repress "agitation" was thrown into the support of the movement that it might be consummated before the people could interpose and defeat it. And now, when an outraged people, regarding this as merely a precursor to other demands, and still further schemes, are stirred up not only to resistance to future aggressions, but to punish the present aggressors, the authors of the agitation cry "peace!" "peace!" "peace!" For once, we apprehend, they have incited a storm they cannot allay. The men, and there are many thousands of them, who in spite of their earnest desire for peace and willingness to submit to much before they will rebel, have been driven into their present position, will find in the recollection of their former submission an additional incentive to now make their warfare a lasting one, and lay down their arms only when conquered by others than themselves, or when the objects for which they contend have been secured. The battle is not one of their seeking, and they will not withdraw from the field because the warfare is distasteful to those who commenced it.

Cannot some friend with poetic genius furnish us with an "elegy on the death of the whig and free soil parties?" We will agree to publish with beautiful illustrations in wood—of coffins, rosters, manacled men and women, dismantled ships driving on desolate rocks, a senate house crumbling to dust, men being shot as deserters, manufactories burning, and last, though not least, a beautifully distinct view of an invisible geographical line just torn from its base, and exhibited to the eyes of an outraged universe by the effracted parties, the parties themselves beautifully drawn in the background—but invisible—shouting their motto: "no compromises with slavery." The poem must not exceed ten thousand lines—must be equal to Byron in strength—to Moore in ease and flow of imagery—and to the "fusion papers" in point of truth.—Racine Co. Democrat.

These outlines for an effective poem are very well presented, though the subject is very unhappily chosen. There is a far better chance for the exercise of poetic genius in recording the rise and fall of the party whose dying struggles are seen in every section of the country, and whose interment is already chronicled in New Hampshire, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Missouri, Iowa, Vermont and Maine. The narrative, in point of incident, and the opportunity for the introduction of great names, offers a greater scope than the prize poems of the New York Evening Post on the bombardment of Greytown. Would not our Racine cotemporary be more likely to get a popular contribution to his columns by changing its construction in accordance with the character we have suggested?

A HOPEFUL POSTMASTER.—A day or two ago we alluded to a "reformation" in some of the Illinois post offices, the exact nature of the change being the removal of such incumbents as refused to swear by Nebraska and Douglas, and the appointment of those who would.—There is one office, however, in which no change is needed, if we may judge from the following notification sent to the Chicago Democratic Press, and published in that paper:

Hoapevell, Ill., September.

We don't want your pauper any longer. Since we are not abolishing and we are Douglas men. So let it slide till you get further orders. No more but yours P. M. Hoapevell, Ills.

A. Travis.

Mr. A. Travis's head is safe, if the owner is not in a fair way of promotion. We should not be surprised to find him filling a snug berth in the department at Washington, especially if his aptitude for official duty is equal to his scholastic acquirements.

RAILROAD SUBSCRIPTION.—The Monroe Sentinel of Wednesday says that up to Monday, the 18th inst., $410,000 had been subscribed in Green county, to the stock of the Southern Wisconsin railroad. Wednesday and Thursday meetings were to be held in Decatur and Clarence, at which the Sentinel thought the amount of stock would be raised to $460,000. In addition to this amount, (mortgage subscriptions, we suppose,) $40,000 had been subscribed, and the whole subscription in Green county, is expected to be half a million. This is doing unexpectedly well, and shows what earnest, hearty labor will do.

In Lafayette county, the Sentinel says Mr. Clinton has held two meetings, but being obliged to return home on business for the La Crosse and Milwaukee Company, his further visit to the counties west will be deferred until further notice—two or three weeks, perhaps.

THE BAILEY TROUPE.—This troupe give another exhibition this evening. We write this, without having seen them last evening, but they are very favorably spoken of elsewhere, and we have no doubt the entertainment is a pleasant one.

A VOTE IN VERMONT.—The Nebraska candidate for congress received but two votes in the four towns of Dover, Halifax, Wilmington, and Windham, Vt., although there are nine postmasters in these towns. As there are not enough of the faithful to fill the places, the administration will probably abolish the offices. So obdurate a population can scarce expect the favor of the government.

E. P. Ferry, of Lake county, Ill., was nominated at Rockford for congress by the anti-Nebraskaites. If this is the same Ferry we met at Washington after the inauguration, he is a very clever gentleman, and a disappointed applicant for a French consulate, which, of course, has nothing to do with his opposition to the leading measure of the administration.—Mil. News.

Such reflections are inconsiderate, as they may suggest an inquiry into the antecedents of a large share of the administration backers, and the price of their support of the Nebraska bill. Such an inquiry, especially among the press of this state, might be more interesting to the inquirers than the inquired.

When the administration took that bill in charge, only two papers in the state, the News and the Madison Argus, sustained it. Now, a majority of the whole are among its advocates, and in each we find the suggestive words "by authority" at the head of the laws of congress, post office, land office, and other kinds of choice advertising. Perhaps this "has nothing to do with the support of a leading measure of the administration," to the beauties of which they were once apparently blind, but which are now so clearly seen that no charity is felt for those whose sight is yet dimmed; but for the comfort of the patients we think the inquiry had better be not too closely pushed.

DISCONTINUED.—The post office at Montezuma, Green county, has been discontinued. The supreme court of this state met at Madison day before yesterday.

A TALE OF LONDON.

CHAPTER I.
"Dear Arthur," said the low, tender voice of a female, as she brushed back the heavy chestnut locks from his pale brow, "you must not, indeed you must not, labor so incessantly. You will injure your health—perhaps ruin it entirely, and then what will be left for me?"

"Mary," said the young painter caressingly, "you are alarming yourself to no purpose. I am not weary. Besides, what were a little weariness in comparison with the great purpose I have in view? You know the exhibition will open in a fortnight, and my picture is still unfinished. Oh," continued he with enthusiasm, while a faint flush overspread his pale cheek, "if it could be my fortune to gain the great prize of five hundred pounds which has been offered for the best painting on exhibition, I believe I could die content."

"Arthur!" said his wife reproachfully.
"But better still," said the young painter caressingly, "to live and enjoy it with you, my sweet wife. With such a start what might I not hope for? Fame—fortune—friends, and I have still much to do before I retire. But do not wait for me, dear Mary; I shall work the faster if I know that you are rejoicing."

Arthur Elliot was the son of a clergyman in one of the midland counties of England. At the age of seventeen he had entered the office of his uncle, an attorney in London, a hard, worldly man, wholly engrossed in business. Young Arthur, who was a boy of sensitive and highly imaginative temperament, found little sympathy with his peculiar tastes in the dry dusty folios over which he was expected to pore day after day, or in the deeds and legal instruments which he was called upon to engross. He devoted his leisure time to obtaining some knowledge of painting, from a teacher of that art. He made so great proficiency in this department, as to surprise his teacher, who exclaimed with enthusiasm that he was born to be an artist.

"And why should I not be?" thought Arthur to himself. "With law I am completely disgusted; I shall never make a figure at it. Why then should I not abandon what I so utterly detest, and pursue that which offers so much stronger attractions?"

Full of this resolution, he went to his uncle and requested his permission to adopt it. But the scheme appeared absurd and chimerical to the man of business, and he utterly forbade Arthur's cherishing any such plans in future. This to one of his nephew's high spirit was more than he could bear. His place in his uncle's office was vacant the next day, and remained so. Arthur had collected his little articles of personal property, and fled to the house of his instructor, where, undetected he pursued his studies with the utmost assiduity. His master had a daughter, a beautiful girl, whose disposition and manners were as amiable as her features were faultless. What wonder that Arthur fell in love, and that the two, with their father's consent, exchanged vows of fidelity, though both were too young yet to think of marriage?

This, however, was hastened by an event which plunged them both in affliction. Mary's father died. She was left alone in the world, with no one but Arthur to depend upon. Arthur was just on the verge of twenty—Mary but sixteen. Under the circumstances, however, it was thought best they should marry. Mary's fortune was but small. Her father left behind him nothing but the materials of his art.

At first Arthur resolved to follow in the steps of his father-in-law, but he soon found this to be an insupportable drudgery, and became convinced that this was no way to become an artist.

He accordingly commenced painting pictures for sale, but, as is too often the case, found that genius unknown is unappreciated. His income was scanty—hardly sufficient to supply himself and Mary with the bare necessities of life. It was at this stage that it was announced that at the annual exhibition of paintings the prize already alluded to would be awarded to the production, pronounced by a committee appointed for that purpose, to be the most deserving.

This offer fired Arthur's ambition. Why should not he, filled as he was with the inspiration of genius, why should not he gain it? It was not impossible. He could at least try.

He selected as his subject "The Transfiguration of the Saviour." Without entering into details of the painting, which could only be done properly by an artist, it is sufficient to say the conception was a grand one, and the execution of a high character.

But in the mean time, how were they to live? The painting on which Arthur was now engaged was a work of time, and it was a considerable period before he could hope to derive any pecuniary profit from it.

They were now renting a small attic chamber in an obscure street in London; Mary had assisted her husband as far as she was able, by obtaining work from the shop-keepers, which amounted to a mere pittance, but they had learned to live frugally under that sternest of teachers—necessity.

CHAPTER II.

It was early on the morning of the day after that which our story commences. Arthur, worn out by his midnight vigils, had not yet risen. Mary was astir; she had already prepared and eaten a frugal meal, and the small table—the only one in the apartment—was covered with a white cloth, on which was spread, as tempting an array as the nature of the food would admit, the breakfast intended for the husband.

Suddenly there was a violent knock at the door. Mary glanced towards her husband, who still lay buried in deep sleep, apprehensive that he might be awakened, and then went towards the door and opened it.

A course-featured man entered.
"Good morning, Mrs. Elliot," was his salutation. "You see I have come for my week's rent. I am not likely to forget that."

"The rent!" said Mary, apprehensively. "I am sorry, Mr. Mudge, but I haven't quite got it ready. I didn't succeed in finishing the work I had on hand so soon as I anticipated, and I must ask your indulgence for a day or two."

"Oh yes, the old story," said the man with a sneer. "and if I should come again in a day or two, you wouldn't have finished the work you have on hand, and would ask for a day or two more. Oh yes, I am used to such a game."

"But Mr. Mudge, have I failed you before, and should I be likely to begin now? If you will come Tuesday you shall have the rent, if I have to pawn some of my furniture to raise the money."

Mr. Mudge was half persuaded, but still sullen. "There's your husband; why doesn't he work?" He is able to. You wouldn't find any difficulty in raising the rent if he would do something."

"Arthur works already beyond his strength," was the wife's slightly indignant rejoinder, for she could not bear to have any imputation upon him, and some day we shall see what it will lead to.

Just then her husband stirred in his sleep, and Mary hastily repeating, "Call again Tuesday and you shall have it," closed the door and went to his bedside.

"They are a proud set," said Mudge to himself, as he descended the rickety stair case which nearly caused him to stumble. "They are a proud set, and they say pride and poverty always go together. But if the rent isn't ready Tuesday, their pride will be pretty likely to meet with a fall, or my name isn't Mudge."

Perceiving that her husband still slept, the artist's wife took up her work, and began to ply her needle busily. The work she had received from the shop-keeper consisted of shirts for which she received eighteen pence a piece. She had taken a bundle of six, which when completed, would amount to a little over a dollar. By great diligence she could make three of these in two days, which would give them an income of rather more than a dollar and a half per week. Of this sum one half was obliged to go for the rent of the miserable room in which they lodged.

By and by Arthur aroused himself from the deep sleep in which he had been plunged, and looked around him.

"It is late," said he; "the sun is already high, and I must go to work."

He dressed himself hastily, and partook of the food which his wife had prepared for him. The next day passed, and Monday afternoon brought to Mrs. Elliot the sad conviction that she had miscalculated as to the rapidity with which she could perform her work, and that she would not after all be prepared to meet Mr. Mudge with the rent on the day following. Knowing his unfeeling nature, she could not doubt that he would insist on their instantly vacating the apartment. This was to be avoided at all hazards. She knew her husband's high spirit, and she feared for the consequences if Mr. Mudge should be insolent.

Full of this thought she took a light gold chain which in earlier days her husband had presented to her, and proceeded with reluctant step to the pawnbroker's. It was drawing towards evening, and she hurried through the streets, scarcely daring to look to the right hand or to the left, lest she should meet with some interruption.

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.—The Morris Yocman speaks as follows of the late effort of Senator Douglas at Morris:

"Taking it as a whole, the effort was perfectly satisfactory, as a clear exhibition of the Giant's courage, his nobility, and his entire altruism. But we must give him credit for one successful hit. It was good—it made us smile very loud—and he deserves to have it recorded. He told us something of course we never heard of before, that the whig party was dead, and that he always spoke with the proudest respect of the dead! This was rich—this was certainly rich, coming as it did from the man who, during the last six months, has cut the throat, ripped the abdomen, flayed the body, and scalped the head of the democratic party, and laid it out a helpless, resurrectionless corpse. It was rich, we say, to hear the man talk of dead whigery, who is himself the walking obituary upon the democratic party."

The honorable gentleman was really fiery in his remarks upon these most wonderful people, the "Know Nothings." He read from a bit of paper their diabolical oaths and cabalistic catches, and told about their orgies, their aims, their unholy vigils—how every one of them was pledged to kill his grandfather, if he was a foreigner, and to eat him afterward, until the hair of his auditors was ready to rise with terror, and we really trembled for one of the gentlemen's backers on the platform, who had many indications about them of membership with those ghoulish conspirators."

TRUTH.—The N. O. Bulletin, remarking upon the comparatively small proportion which the foreign born population, introduced in this country since 1789, together with their dependents now bear to the entire population, accounts for it thus:

"The reason why the foreign born do not sum a greater figure in our census statistics, is truly a sad one. It has been estimated that fifty per cent. of the emigrants die within twelve months after embarking. This estimate is probably too large; but when we recollect that they constitute nearly nine-tenths of those who die from ship fever, epidemics of all kinds, explosions and accidents, to say nothing of the fatality of acclimation, it cannot be denied that it has a melancholy basis of fact to rest upon. We wish it were otherwise, but of what avail are human wishes?"

SOMETHING RICH.—A story has been going the rounds that Douglas recently wrote a letter, in which he used the following language concerning Mr. Yates, a candidate for congress in Illinois:

"Dear the damned little pig, cost what it will, and it will learn him to leave my business alone."

The Cleveland Plain Dealer of Monday says:

"Douglas never wrote such a line. Senator Douglas does not swear. He never was heard to use profane language. He is a professor of religion, preys in his family, and is a model man morally." All his personal acquaintances bear testimony to this.

The Plaindealer also states that Douglas is not a slaveholder. He is not, he has not recently sold three hundred negroes. A few weeks since the Washington Union published a long account of a big dinner given to Douglas' negroes, at which there was far alive.—Chenail's Commercial.

THE NEW DOLLAR COIN.—We learn that the secretary of the treasury has ordered the new gold dollar coin, described at length by us some time since, to be substituted for the American gold dollar coin now in circulation. As we remarked, when previously writing on the subject the new coin has as large a surface as the silver five cent piece. Orders have been sent to have them struck off in all the United States mints, in which coining is done. No more of the current gold dollar coin will be struck off.—Washington Star.

ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS AT SYRACUSE.—The corner stone of the New York asylum for idiots was laid with appropriate ceremonies at Syracuse, on Friday, the 8th inst., at 11 o'clock in the forenoon. This will be the first building erected in the United States for the education of idiots.

MONROE SENTINEL.—Messrs. N. L. Stout and G. W. Tenney have leased this paper for a year, and will during that time edit and publish it.—The Sentinel, under the charge of Mr. Walworth, left the Pierce and Douglas democracy, and the new publishers take it where he left it, openly advocating the republican cause, and supporting republican candidates. It deserves well from the people of Green county, and we hope it will be handsomely sustained.

Who shall quit?—The Richmond Whig, in evident alarm at the popular indignation which itself, with southern whig senators and congressmen, aided a servile democracy in arousing at the north, exclaims:—"We are tired of this everlasting commotion about negroes; the southern people are tired of it, and they want peace and quiet, if it can be obtained without the sacrifice of their inalienable rights." To this appeal the Albany Journal replies: "It is unfortunate that such sentiments were not sooner expressed and acted upon by the leading journalists and congressmen of the south. They could have had 'peace and quiet' long ago if they had desired it. Indeed, they had them pretty effectually, until they chose to violate the compromises by which they were secured. Now, what they refused to be satisfied with when it was attained, they cannot secure for the asking. It is too late. The 'commotion' evoked by the south, when it followed the Douglas lead, cannot be laid until the compact violated shall be avenged, by securing Kansas and Nebraska to freedom, and the recognition of the principle that all territories and all new states shall be free. The whig, therefore, is likely to become very tired before it secures what it so earnestly covets."

No one can fail to see, and every candid man must admit, that whatever evil (if evil there be) the agitation now convulsing the free states threatens the country, southern slaveholders and northern politicians are solely responsible for it. The north, not less than the south, earnestly desired peace and quiet. After a long struggle in congress, the compromises of 1850 had been passed, and the public mind, unbittered by the struggle, continued the contest waged in that capitol. At length, tired of the warfare, the public sentiment, "smothered, not continued," as the Grant County Herald well remarked in an article we copied yesterday, was prepared to reluctantly acquiesce in what it could not change, and purchase peace at the expense of a humiliating submission. Not satisfied with this triumph, new demands were made upon the forbearance of the north, and new immunities were demanded for an institution repugnant to every feeling of humanity and justice. A compromise made thirty years ago, to quiet an agitation then pervading the union, and under which the south had realized all to which it was entitled, and the north had received nothing, was most treacherously repudiated, without warning to the people or the slightest authority from them. To accomplish this, southern whig representatives united with their old democratic enemies, and the whole power and patronage of an administration elected and pledged to repress "agitation" was thrown into the support of the movement that it might be consummated before the people could interpose and defeat it. And now, when an outraged people, regarding this as merely a precursor to other demands, and still further schemes, are stirred up not only to resistance to future aggressions, but to punish the present aggressors, the authors of the agitation cry "peace!" "peace!" "peace!"

For once, we apprehend, they have incited a storm they cannot allay. The men, and there are many thousands of them, who in spite of their earnest desire for peace and willingness to submit to much before they will rebel, have been driven into their present position, will find in the recollection of their former submission an additional incentive to now make their warfare a lasting one, and lay down their arms only when conquered by others than themselves, or when the objects for which they contend have been secured.

The battle is not one of their seeking, and they will not withdraw from the field because the warfare is distasteful to those who commenced it.

Cannot some friend with poetic genius furnish us with an "elegy on the death of the whig" with beautiful illustrations—in wood—of coffined, manacled men and women, dismantled ships driving on desolate rocks, a senate house crumbling to dust, men being shot as deserters, manufactories burning, and last, though not least, a beautifully distinct view of an invisible geographical line just torn from its base, and exhibited to the eyes of an outraged universe by the affrayed parties, the parties themselves beautifully drawn in the background—but invisible—shouting their motto: "no compromises with slavery." The poem must not exceed ten thousand lines—must be equal to Byron in strength—to Moore in ease and flow of imagery—and to the "fusion papers" in point of truth.—Racine Co. Democrat.

These outlines for an effective poem are very well presented, though the subject is very unhappily chosen. There is a far better chance for the exercise of poetic genius in recording the rise and fall of the party whose dying struggles are seen in every section of the country, and whose interment is already chronicled in New Hampshire, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Missouri, Iowa, Vermont and Maine. The narrative, in point of incident, and the opportunity for the introduction of great names, offers a greater scope than the prize poems of the New York Evening Post on the bombardment of Greorgetown. Would not our Racine cotemporary be more likely to get a popular contribution to his columns by changing its construction in accordance with the character we have suggested?

A MOREFUL POSTMASTER.—A day or two ago we alluded to a "reformation" in some of the Illinois post offices, the exact nature of the change being the removal of such incumbents as refused to swear by Nebraska and Douglas, and the appointment of those who would.—There is one office, however, in which no change is needed, if we may judge from the following notification sent to the Chicago Democratic Press, and published in that paper:

Hoopewell, Ill., September.
We don't want your paper any longer. Since we are not abolitionists and we are Douglas men. So let it still till you get further orders. No more but yours P. M. Hoopewell, Ills.

Mr. A. Travis's head is safe, if the owner is not in a fair way of promotion. We should not be surprised to find him filling a snug berth in the department at Washington, especially if his aptitude for official duty is equal to his scholastic acquirements.

RAILROAD SUBSCRIPTION.—The Monroe Sentinel of Wednesday says that up to Monday, the 18th inst., $410,000 had been subscribed in Green county, to the stock of the Southern Wisconsin railroad. Wednesday and Thursday meetings were to be held in Decatur and Clarence, at which the Sentinel thought the amount of stock would be raised to $460,000. In addition to this amount, (mortgage subscriptions, we suppose,) $40,000 had been subscribed, and the whole subscription in Green county, is expected to be half a million. This is doing unexpectedly well, and shows what earnest, hearty labor will do.

In Lafayette county, the Sentinel says Mr. Clinton has held two meetings, but being obliged to return home on business for the La Crosse and Milwaukee Company, his further visit to the counties west will be deferred until further notice—two or three weeks, perhaps.

THE BAILEY TROUPE.—This troupe give another exhibition this evening. We write this, without having seen them last evening, but they are very favorably spoken of elsewhere, and we have no doubt the entertainment is a pleasant one.

A VOTE IN VERMONT.—The Nebraska candidate for congress received but two votes in the four towns of Dover, Taffins, Wilmington, and Windham, Vt., although there are nine postmasters in these towns. As there are not enough of the faithful to fill the places, the administration will probably abolish the offices. So obdurate a population can scarce expect the favor of the government.

E. P. Ferry, of Lake county, Ill., was nominated at Rockford for congress by the anti-Nebraskaists. If this is the same Perry we met at Washington after the inauguration, he is a very clever gentleman, and a disappointed applicant for a French consulate, which, of course, has nothing to do with his opposition to the leading measure of the administration.—Mt. View.

Such reflections are inconsiderate, as they may suggest an inquiry into the antecedents of a large share of the administration backers, and the price of their support of the Nebraska bill. Such an inquiry, especially among the press of this state, might be more interesting to the inquirers than the inquiry.

When the administration took that bill in charge, only two papers in the state, the News and the Madison Argus, sustained it. Now, a majority of the whole are among its advocates, and in each we find the suggestive words "by authority" at the head of the laws of congress, post office, land office, and other kinds of choice advertising. Perhaps this "has nothing to do with the support of a leading measure of the administration," to the beauties of which the were once apparently blind, but which are now so clearly seen that no charity is felt for those whose sight is yet dimmed; but for the comfort of the patients we think the inquiry had better be not too closely pushed.

DISCONTINUED.—The post office at Montezuma, Green county, has been discontinued.

The supreme court of this state met at Madison day before yesterday.

WOOD-WARE.</

"Dear Arthur," said the low, tender voice of a female, as she brushed back the heavy chestnut locks from his pale brow, "you must not, indeed you must not labor so incessantly. You will injure your health—perhaps ruin it entirely, and then what will be left for me?"

"Mary," said the young painter carelessly, "you are alarming yourself to no purpose. I am not weary. Besides, what were a little weariness in comparison with the great purpose I have in view? You know the exhibition will open in a fortnight, and my picture is still unfinished. Oh," continued he with enthusiasm, "while a faint flush overspread his pale cheek, 'if it could be my fortune to gain the great prize of five hundred pounds which has been offered for the best painting on exhibition, I believe I could die content.'"

"Arthur!" said his wife reproachfully. "But better still," said the young painter carelessly, "to live and enjoy it with you, my sweet wife. With such a start what might I not hope for? Fame—fortune—happiness, all would be mine. But it is growing late, and I have still much to do before I retire. But do not wait for me, dear Mary; I shall work the faster if I know that you are resting."

Arthur Elliot was the son of a clergyman in one of the midland counties of England. At the age of seventeen he had entered the office of his uncle, an attorney in London, a hard, worldly man, wholly engrossed in business. Young Arthur, who was a boy of sensitive and highly imaginative temperament, found little sympathy with his peculiar tastes in the dry matter of law, and he was expected to pore day after day, or in the deeds and legal instruments which he was called upon to engross. He devoted his leisure time to obtaining some knowledge of painting, from a teacher of that art. He made so great proficiency in this department, as to surprise his teacher, who exclaimed with enthusiasm that he was born to be an artist.

"And why should I not be?" thought Arthur to himself. "With law I am completely disgusted; I shall never make a figure at it. Why then should I not abandon what I so utterly detest, and pursue that which offers so much stronger attractions?"

Full of this resolution, he went, to his uncle and requested his permission to adopt it. But the scheme appeared absurd and chimerical to the man of business, and he utterly forbade Arthur's cherishing any such plans in future. This to one of his nephew's high spirit was more than he could bear. His place in his uncle's office was vacant the next day, and he remained so. Arthur had collected his little articles of personal property, and fled to the house of his instructor, where, undetected he pursued his studies with the utmost assiduity. His master had a daughter, a beautiful girl, whose disposition and manners were as amiable as her features were faultless. What wonder that Arthur fell in love, and that the two, with their father's consent, exchanged vows of fidelity, though both were too young yet to think of marriage?

This, however, was hastened by an event which plunged them both in affliction. Mary's father died. She was left alone in the world, with no one but Arthur to depend upon. Arthur was just on the verge of twenty—Mary but sixteen. Under the circumstances, however, it was thought best they should marry. Mary's fortune was but small. Her father left behind him nothing but the materials of his art.

At first Arthur resolved to follow in the steps of his father-in-law, but he soon found this to be insupportable drudgery, and became convinced that this was no way to become an artist.

He accordingly commenced painting pictures for sale, but, as is too often the case, found that genius unknown is unappreciated. His income was scanty—hardly sufficient to supply himself and Mary with the bare necessities of life.

It was at this stage that it was announced that at the annual exhibition of paintings the prize already alluded to would be awarded to the production, pronounced by a committee appointed for that purpose, to be the most deserving.

This offer fired Arthur's ambition. Why should not he, filled as he was with the inspiration of genius, why should not he gain it? It was not impossible. He could at least try.

He selected as his subject "The Transfiguration of the Saviour." Without entering into details of the painting, which could only be done properly by an artist, it is sufficient to say the conception was a grand one, and the execution of a high character.

But in the mean time, how were they to live? The painting on which Arthur was now engaged was a work of time, and it was a considerable period before he could hope to derive any pecuniary profit from it.

They were now renting a small attic chamber in an obscure street in London; Mary had assisted her husband as far as she was able, by obtaining work from the shopkeepers, which amounted to a mere pittance, but they had learned to live frugally under that sternest of teachers—necessity.

It was early on the morning of the day after that which our story commences. Arthur, worn out by his midnight vigils, had not yet risen. Mary was astir; she had already prepared and eaten a frugal meal, and the small table—the only one in the apartment—was covered with a white cloth, on which was spread, as tempting an array as the nature of the food would admit, the breakfast intended for the husband.

Suddenly there was a violent knock at the door. Mary glanced towards her husband, who still lay buried in deep sleep, apprehensive that he might be awakened, and then went towards the door and opened it.

A coarse-faceted man entered. "Good morning, Mrs. Elliot," was his salutation. "You see I have come for my week's rent. I am not likely to forget that."

"The rent!" said Mary, apprehensively. "I am sorry, Mr. Mudge, but I haven't quite got it ready. I didn't succeed in finishing the work I had on hand so soon as I anticipated, and I must ask your indulgence for a day or two."

"Oh yes, the old story," said the man with a sneer; "and if I should come again in a day or two, you wouldn't have finished the work you have on hand, and would ask for a day or two more. Oh yes, I am used to such games."

"But, Mr. Mudge, have I failed you before, and should I be likely to begin now? If you will come Tuesday you shall have the rent, if I have to pawn some of my furniture to raise the money."

Mr. Mudge was half persuaded, but still sulky. "There's your husband; why doesn't he work? He is able to. You wouldn't find any difficulty in raising the rent if he would do something."

him, and some day we shall see what it led to.

Just then her husband stirred in his sleep, and Mary, hastily repeating, "Call again Tuesday and you shall have it," closed the door and went to his bedside.

"They are a proud set," said Mudge to himself, as he descended the rickety stair case which nearly caused him to stumble. "They are a proud set, and they say pride and poverty always go together. But if the rent isn't ready Tuesday, their pride will be pretty likely to meet with a fall, or my name isn't Mudge."

Perceiving that her husband still slept, the artist's wife took up her work, and began to ply her needle busily. The work she had received from the shop-keeper consisted of shirts for which she received eighteen pence a piece. She had taken a bundle of six, which when completed would amount to a little over a dollar. By great diligence she could make three of these in two days, which would give them an income of rather more than a dollar and a half per week. Of this sum one half was obliged to go for the rent of the miserable room in which they lodged.

By and by Arthur awoke himself, from the deep sleep in which he had been plunged, and looked around him.

"It is late," said he; "the sun is already high, and I must go to work."

He dressed himself hastily, and partook of the food which his wife had prepared for him. The next day passed, and Monday afternoon brought to Mrs. Elliot the sad conviction that she had miscalculated as to the rapidity with which she could perform her work, and that she would not after all be prepared to meet Mr. Mudge with the rent on the day following. Knowing his unfeeling nature, she could not doubt that he would insist on their instantly vacating the apartment. This was to be avoided at all hazards. She knew her husband's high spirit, and she feared for the consequences if Mr. Mudge should be insolent.

Full of this thought she took a light gold chain which in earlier days her husband had presented to her, and proceeded with reluctant step to the pawnbroker's. It was drawing towards evening, and she hurried through the streets, scarcely daring to look to the right hand or to the left, lest she should meet with some interruption.

THE PIONEER'S PROGRESS.—The Morris Yeoman speaks as follows of the late effort of senator Douglas at Morris:

"Taking it as a whole, the effort was perfectly satisfactory, as a clear exhibition of the Giant's calibre, his aims, motives, and his entire animus. But we must give him credit for one successful hit. It was good—it made us smile very loud—and he deserves to have it recorded. He told us something of course we never heard of before, that the whig party was dead, and that he always spoke with the proudest respect of the dead! This was rich—this was certainly rich, coming as it did from the man who, during the last six months, has cut the throat, ripped the abdomen, flayed the body, and scalped the head of the democratic party, and laid it out a hopeless, resurrectionless corpse. It was rich, we say, to hear the man talk of dead whiggery, who is himself the walking obituary upon the democratic party."

The honorable gentleman was really fiery in his remarks upon those most wonderful people, the "Know Nothings." He read from a bit of paper their diabolical oaths and cabalistic catches, and told about their orgies, their arms, their unholy vigils—how every one of them was pledged to kill his grandfather, if he was a foreigner, and to eat him afterward, until the hair of his auditors was ready to rise with terror, and we really trembled for one of the gentlemen's backers on the platform, who had many indications about them of membership with those ghastly conspirators."

TRUCE.—The N. O. Bulletin, remarking upon the comparatively small proportion which the foreign born population, introduced in this country since 1790, together with their descendants now bear to the entire population, accounts for it thus:

"The reason why the foreign born do not sum a greater figure in our census statistics, is truly a sad one. It has been estimated that fifty per cent. of the emigrants die within twelve months after embarking. This estimate is probably too large; but when we recollect that they constitute nearly nine-tenths of those who die from ship fever, epidemics of all kinds, explosions and accidents, to say nothing of the fatality of acclimation, it cannot be denied that it has a melancholy basis of fact to rest upon. We wish it were otherwise, but of what avail are human wishes."

SOMETHING RICH.—A story has been going the rounds that Douglas recently wrote a letter, in which he used the following language concerning Mr. Yates, a candidate for congress in Illinois:

"Beat the damned little pup, cost what it will, and it will learn him to leave my business alone."

The Cleveland Plain Dealer of Monday, says: "Douglas never wrote such a line. Senator Douglas does not swear. He never was heard to use profane language. He is a professor of religion, prayer in his family, and is a model man morally (?). All his personal acquaintances bear testimony to this."

The Plaindealer also states that Douglas is not a slaveholder. If he is not, he must recently have sold three hundred negroes. A few weeks since the Washington Union published a long account of a big dinner given to Douglas' negroes, at which there was fusillade.—Cincinnati Commercial.

THE NEW DOLLAR COIN.—We learn that the secretary of the treasury has ordered the new gold dollar coin, described at length by us some time since, to be substituted for the American gold dollar coin now in circulation. As we remarked, when previously writing on the subject the new coin has as large a surface as the silver five cent piece. Orders have been sent to have them struck off in all the United States mints, in which coining is done. No more of the current gold dollar coin will be struck off.—Washington Star.

ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS AT SYRACUSE.—The corner stone of the New York asylum for idiots was laid with appropriate ceremonies at Syracuse, on Friday, the 8th inst., at 11 o'clock in the forenoon. This will be the first building erected in the United States for the education of idiots.

MONROE SENTINEL.—Messrs. N. L. Stout and G. W. Tenney have leased this paper for a year, and will during that time edit and publish it.—The Sentinel, under the charge of Mr. Walworth, left the Pierce and Douglas democracy, and the new publishers take it where he left it, openly advocating the republican cause, and supporting republican candidates. It deserves well from the people of Green county, and we hope it will be handsomely sustained.

WHO SHALL QUIT?—The Richmond Whig, in evident alarm at the popular indignation which itself, with southern whig senators and congressmen, aided a servile democracy in arousing at the north, exclaims: "We are tired of this everlasting commotion about negroes; the southern people are tired of it, and they want peace and quiet, if it can be obtained without the sacrifice of their inalienable rights." To this appeal the Albany Journal replies: "It is unfortunate that such sentiments were not sooner expressed and acted upon by the leading journalists and congressmen of the south. They could have had 'peace and quiet' long ago if they had desired it. Indeed, they had them pretty effectually, until they chose to violate the compromises by which they were secured. Now, what they refused to be satisfied with when it was attained, they cannot secure for the asking. It is too late: The 'commotion' evoked by the south, when it followed the Douglas lead, cannot be layed until the compact violated shall be avenged, by securing Kansas and Nebraska to freedom, and the recognition of the principle that all territories and all new states shall be free. The whig, therefore, is likely to become very tired before it so, cures what it so earnestly covets."

No one can fail to see, and every candid man must admit, that whatever evil (if evil there be) the agitation now convulsing the free states threatens the country, southern slaveholders and northern politicians are solely responsible for it. The north, not less than the south, earnestly desired peace and quiet. After a long struggle in congress, the compromises of 1850 had been passed, and the public mind, embittered by the struggle, continued the contest waged in that capital. At length, tired of the warfare, the public sentiment, "smothered, not convinced," as the Grant County Herald well remarked in an article we copied yesterday, was prepared to reluctantly acquiesce in what it could not change, and purchase peace at the expense of a humiliating submission. Not satisfied with this triumph, new demands were made upon the forbearance of the north, and new immunities were demanded for an institution repugnant to every feeling of humanity and justice. A compromise made thirty years ago, to quiet an agitation then pervading the union, and under which the south had realized all to which it was entitled, and the north had received nothing, was most treacherously repealed, without warning to the people or the slightest authority from them. To accomplish this, southern whig representatives united with their old democratic enemies, and the whole power and patronage of an administration elected and pledged to repress "agitation" was thrown into the support of the movement that it might be consummated before the people could interpose and defeat it. And now, when an outraged people, regarding this as merely a precursor to other demands, and still further schemes, are stirred up not only to resistance to future aggressions, but to punish the present aggressors, the authors of the agitation cry "peace!" "peace!" "peace!"

For once, we apprehend, they have incited a storm they cannot allay. The men, and there are many thousands of them, who in spite of their earnest desire for peace and willingness to submit to much before they will rebel, have been driven into their present position, will find in the recollection of their former submission an additional incentive to now make their warfare a lasting one, and lay down their arms only when conquered by others than themselves, or when the objects for which they contend have been secured: The battle is not one of their seeking, and they will not withdraw from the field because the warfare is distasteful to those who commenced it.

Cannot we find with poetic genius furnish us with an "elegy on the death of the whig and free soil parties?" We will agree to publish with beautiful illustrations—in wood—of collins, roosters, manacled men and women, dismantled ships driving on desolate rocks, a senate house crumbling to dust, men being shot as deserters, manufactories burning, and last, though not least, a beautifully distinct view of an invisible geographical line just torn from its base, and exhibited to the eyes of an outraged universe by the aforesaid parties, the parties themselves beautifully drawn in the background—but invisible—shouting their motto: "no compromises with slavery." The poem must not exceed ten thousand lines—must be equal to Byron in strength—to Moore in ease and flow of language—and to the "fusion papers" in point of truth.—Racine Co. Democrat.

These outlines for an effective poem are very well presented, though the subject is very unhappily chosen. There is a far better chance for the exercise of poetic genius in recording the rise and fall of the party whose dying struggles are seen in every section of the country, and whose interment is already chronicled in New Hampshire, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Missouri, Iowa, Vermont and Maine. The narrative, in point of incident, and the opportunity for the introduction of great names, offers a greater scope than the prize poems of the New York Evening Post on the bombardment of Greytown. Would not our Racine contemporary be more likely to get a popular contribution to his columns by changing its construction in accordance with the character we have suggested?

A HOPEFUL POSTMASTER.—A day or two ago we alluded to a "reformation" in some of the Illinois post offices, the exact nature of the change being the removal of such incumbents as refused to swear by Nebraska and Douglas, and the appointment of those who would.—There is one office, however, in which no change is needed, if we may judge from the following notification sent to the Chicago Democratic Press, and published in that paper:

Hoopewell, Ill., September.
We don't want your pulper any longer. Since we are not abolitionist and we are Douglas men. So let it slide till you get further orders. No more but yours P. M.
Hoopewell, Ills.

Mr. A. Travis's head is safe, if the owner is not in a fair way of promotion. We should not be surprised to find him filling a snug berth in the department at Washington, especially if his aptitude for official duty is equal to his scholastic acquirements.

RAILROAD SUBSCRIPTION.—The Monroe Sentinel of Wednesday says that up to Monday, the 18th inst., $110,000 had been subscribed in Green county, to the stock of the Southern Wisconsin railroad. Wednesday and Thursday meetings were to be held in Decatur and Clarence, at which the Sentinel thought the amount of stock would be raised to $100,000. In addition to this amount, (mortgage subscriptions, we suppose,) $10,000 had been subscribed, and the whole subscription in Green county, is expected to be half a million. This is doing unexpectedly well, and shows what earnest, hearty labor will do.

In Lafayette county, the Sentinel says Mr. Clinton has held two meetings, but being obliged to return home on business for the La Crosse and Milwaukee Company, his further visit to the counties west will be deferred until further notice—two or three weeks, perhaps.

THE BAILEY TROUPE.—This troupe give another exhibition this evening. We write this, without having seen them last evening, but they are very favorably spoken of elsewhere, and we have no doubt the entertainment is a pleasant one.

A VOTE IN VERMONT.—The Nebraska candidate for congress received but two votes in the four towns of Dover, Halifax, Wilmington, and Windham, Vt., although there are nine postmasters in these towns. As there are not enough of the faithful to fill the places, the administration will probably abolish the offices. So obdurate a population can scarce expect the favor of the government.

E. P. Ferry, of Lake county, Ill., was nominated at Rockford for congress by the anti-Nebraskaites. If this is the same Ferry we met at Washington after the inauguration, he is a very clever gentleman, and a disappointed applicant for a French consulate, which, of course, has nothing to do with his opposition to the leading measure of the administration.—Mill. News.

Such reflections are inconsiderate, as they may suggest an inquiry into the antecedents of a large share of the administration backers, and the price of their support of the Nebraska bill. Such an inquiry, especially among the press of this state, might be more interesting to the inquirers than the inquired.

When the administration took that bill in charge, only two papers in the state, the News and the Madison Argus, sustained it. Now, a majority of the whole are among its advocates, and in each we find the suggestive words "by authority" at the head of the laws of congress, post office, land office, and other kinds of choice advertising. Perhaps this "has nothing to do with the support of a leading measure of the administration," to the beauties of which the were once apparently blind, but which are now so clearly seen that no charity is left for those whose sight is yet dimmed; but for life comfort of the patients we think the inquiry had better be not too closely pushed.

DISCONTINUED.—The post office at Montezuma, Green county, has been discontinued.

The supreme court of this state met at Madison before yesterday.
